Radio 1 Minute of Me: Environment special

Radio 1 is handing the microphone to its listeners and giving them the opportunity to have their voice heard. It's 60 seconds to talk about the environment, how you feel about it, whether it is having an impact on your life and your thoughts on the future. This is a great chance for farming to have its voice heard and shout about the fantastic things happening on your farms. We wanted to highlight this opportunity, so you can consider if you want to put yourself forward.

Radio 1 has specifically said it wants to hear from young people so there is more chance of having your story aired if you are under 30, but there is nothing stopping anyone over 30 applying if you would like to. So, what would you say as a farmer?

What do you think other listeners need to hear about farming and the environment?

All you have to do is fill out the online form and explain in 500 words or less, why, as a farmer, you care passionately about the environment and the iconic British countryside alongside producing sustainable climate-friendly food. This is an initial application stage, which then may be followed up by Radio 1 to record something for its shows.

Here is the link to submit your message: <https://www.bbc.co.uk/send/u61217247>

Have a think first about the kind of message you want to land with the Radio 1 listeners – who are mainly aged 15-25. Think about your language – farming can be quite complicated so keep it simple and avoid technical language. Don't be afraid to use statistics or facts and write from your heart.

If you want some help from us in the press team, we're happy to have a chat over the phone or help with your submission. Please contact us if that's the case and keep us posted if you're successful!

Here are a few key messages to help tell your story.

- Farmers manage 70% of Britain's iconic countryside and are dedicated to enhancing and protecting the environment.
- For generations, farmers have created and maintained the iconic British countryside we all enjoy today, supporting rural economies and providing high quality, safe food for the nation.
- Features such as hedges, trees, cattle and sheep grazing in fields and crops being harvested all contribute to the wonderfully varied landscapes we see today.
- British farmers not only produce our food, but also play a key role in protecting the wildlife in the great British countryside - providing habitats through planting hedgerows and flower margins, managing soil health and landscapes, or providing additional feed for farmland birds.
- British farming has an ambition to reach net-zero by 2040 - to be a global leader for climate-friendly food production - and we have taken this challenge head-on:
  - by focusing on the health of our soil and driving productivity to produce food in smarter ways which bring down our emissions, as well as storing carbon on farmland, and using the latest commercial technology and embracing science and innovation, we can become even more productive and sustainable.
- A recent NFU survey showed the public's huge appreciation of the benefits the British countryside offers to the nation – particularly for mental health and physical wellbeing - and that they recognise the valuable role farmers play in creating our iconic landscapes.
- We work hard looking after our soil. This is our greatest asset and it's vital in producing healthy crops to feed the nation. Not only this, but maintaining healthy soil is also key to building up resilience to events such as floods and droughts.
